

Ystrategies Corp. Announces WindWISEM Corp. Launch and Investment

-- Cloud Computing Platform Optimizes Wind Farm Performance --

San Francisco, CA, December 5, 2017 – Ystrategies Corp. (“Ystrategies” or the “Company”) (OTC: YSTR), a publicly-traded venture capital firm focused on technology startups with disruptive intellectual property in the software and cleantech sectors, today announced that it has launched WindWISEM Corp. (“WindWISEM”), a cloud computing platform that optimizes wind farm performance.

WindWISEM, a startup based in the San Francisco Bay Area founded by Ystrategies, applies physics-based algorithms against unpredictable wind data, locally and globally, to identify cooperative action among multiple wind turbines, diminishing risk while increasing power production. Early tests have shown that WindWISEM technology can increase energy production significantly. Also today, Ystrategies filed a WindWISEM presentation with the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (“SEC”) which it is sharing with investors. This presentation can be accessed on the Company’s website at: www.ystrategies.com.

Ystrategies’ $350,000 initial investment jump starts commercialization and supplements existing open source National Renewable Energy Lab (“NREL”) technology. The WindWISEM team is focused on the development, deployment and integration of advanced, proprietary cloud computing software systems and their application to wind plants. Focus areas include including wind and weather data aggregation and analytics systems, wind physics analytics, machine intelligence modules, and command systems for wind turbine control. WindWISEM expects to launch a Phase 1 system with customers in Q2 2018.

“We strongly believe that WindWISEM is a cloud computing/IoT SaaS solution that addresses significant market requirements of wind farms. This global network will optimize wind farm multi-turbine deployments for performance, minimize potential damage and increase production output,” said Jim Kiles, Ystrategies Corp.’s CEO.
